

On a cold winter morning, a light mist lingers in the streets as pedestrians pull their coats tightly around themselves, hurrying to their destinations. A nearby café has just opened its doors, its warm lights illuminating the street outside, inviting passersby to step in for a steaming cup of coffee. In the distance, a few sparrows perch on the bare branches of a tree, chirping softly as if welcoming the new day.